INNER SECURITY AND HUMAN RIGHTS UNDER EXCEPTIONAL CONDITIONS

TERRORISM AND SECURITY CULTURES IN ISRAEL AND GERMANY

The philosophical, legal and technical aspects of „security and human rights“ are not only of historical but also of topical importance.

Challenges and exceptional situations, like the refugee crisis, terrorist attacks and escalating conflicts in the Middle East, as well as new control technologies have fueled discussions about inner security and especially its relation with human rights. How do democracies handle the explosive tension between due security precautions and the necessary protection of human rights? Which differences, which similarities appear? Which role does cyber technology play in this context?

Using Israel and Germany as examples, historians, legal scholars and political scientists debate with experts and practitioners of security technologies and forces about perspectives and actual options for “Inner Security and Human Rights Under Exceptional Conditions”. The current situations of Israel and Germany, two countries closely working together in questions of security, are composed of partly similar and partly quite different challenges and approaches, which can best be analyzed from a comparative perspective. Scholars and practitioners present recent developments in cyber technology and discuss their impacts.

The conference is open to academic colleagues, students and the interested public.
